Madonna Immacolata

Category: Catholic Church

business description: The building stands in the heart of the small village of Restegassi.
The gabled façade is entirely plastered and painted white and extends to the right side, defining a different building from the one under consideration, while maintaining the same finishing characteristics. Therefore, at first glance, it appears asymmetrical. It is preceded by a porch supported by slender Corinthian columns with a high base, with a double water-tap roof on the extrados and a round-arched roof on the intrados. Above the entrance, a quatrefoil rose window and a quadrangular recess complete the composition of the façade. The unframed façade is defined by a high eaves with ovoli. The square-based bell tower stands on the rear side of the church, near the apse. Divided into four levels by projecting cornices, it ends with a bell chamber open with single-lancet windows on each side and covered by a roof surmounted by a bulbous dome on a circular drum. The roof is double-pitched with a tiled surface. The church has a single-nave basilica plan, irregularly shaped due to the surrounding walls, which, from the entrance to the altar and up to the second bay, follow a non-parallel course, moving away from one another. The nave is divided into three bays; the main hall is lower than the presbytery, which ends in a semicircular apse. In the nave preceding the presbytery, two vaulted niches house two minor altars. The baptismal font is located on the left side, near the entrance, housed in a small arched niche closed by a wrought-iron gate. The main hall has a barrel vault with lunettes in the first and third bays and ribbed arches. The presbytery has a dome above the apse, preceded by a ribbed vault. The flooring is made of concrete tiles, hexagonal in black and white for the hall, square with geometric patterns in the same colors for the presbytery area.
